California Awards Nearly $192 Million to Help People Experiencing Unsheltered Homelessness Move from Encampments into Housing

SACRAMENTO – The California Interagency Council on Homelessness (Cal ICH) today announced it has awarded nearly $192 million in Encampment Resolution Fund \(ERF\) grants for 20 projects in 17 California communities to help people experiencing unsheltered homelessness move from encampments into housing.

When completed, the projects funded by the awards announced today will have provided services and supports to nearly 3,600 people and provided permanent housing for nearly 2,200 of those individuals. Twelve of the 20 projects are designed to resolve encampments along state rights-of-way.

“This new funding will get people out of tents and into housing across California,” said Governor Gavin Newsom. “As the state provides unprecedented resources like this, we also expect accountability. Local governments must ensure this funding – and all homeless funding – is getting people out of encampments.”

“These grants show what is possible when the state partners with local communities to put people first and provide them with services to put them on the path to safe, stable housing,” said Business, Consumer Services and Housing Agency Secretary Tomiquia Moss, who co-chairs Cal ICH. “This approach focuses on providing the person-centered local solutions that will ensure that unsheltered Californians are connected to the appropriate housing and supportive services they need to achieve long-term stability.”

“All 17 communities had strong proposals that will help people transition from encampments and onto pathways to housing,” said Cal ICH Executive Officer Meghan
